Press Release

Athens, 27th of May 2021

After living in restriction for many months, we find that - despite the global mobilization and speed of COVID treatment - we are still experiencing the effects of it in many areas in our lives. Even when the pandemic will be dealt effectively, the economic and social consequences will be very big, and we need to think now in order to be prepared effectively for the future.

The Hungarian Export Promotion Agency (HEPA) under the auspices of the Embassy of Hungary in Athens, will organize a scientific forum in Athens with the participation of Greek graduates from Hungarian universities. During this forum, selected Greek, and Hungarian speakers from both the public administration and academia as well as the business community will comment on the evolving situation in the fields of health, economy, and society, in the aftermath of the coronavirus season.

The purpose of this event is to create the ground for cooperation between Greek and Hungarian institutions and companies. The event will be hosted by a reputable Greek journalist and will be hosted at a central event venue in Athens.
